NEW STORY TOLD BY PRETTY GIRL

Police Say Young Woman Who Was Stabbed by Thief Has Confessed.

By the alleged confession of Mary Pagliassotti that she had assisted in the robbery of $500 in gold coin from Victoria Coletti, proprietress of the rooming house at 371 West South Temple street, the police have found a new phase of the strange stabbing and robbery Wednesday, in which the girl was slashed by Salvatore Polidoro, she entered his room and saw him counting the loot.

According to the police, the Italian girl has confessed to having been the paramour of Polidoro, and that she secreted the money for him after she stole it from Mrs. Coletti. The fight in which the girl was so badly cut about the throat and face, followed the refusal of the girl to give up the money until Polidoro promised to marry her.

When seen in the city jail, the pretty Italian girl, who is 19, denied having committed the crime, and reiterated her story that she had entered the room to sweep and had come upon Salvatore, counting out gold coins on the floor.

The bag of money, $100 short of the original amount, was discovered yesterday under the carpet in Polidoro's room. The girl said Wednesday that Polidoro had escaped with the loot.

On complaint of Mrs. Coletti, Mary pagliassotti will be charged with grand larceny. Polidoro is still at large.

PASSENGER MAN SHOWS COURAGE

George W. Martin, Now in City, Makes History in Tennessee.

Among the big coterie of railroad men here for the rate hearing is one of the most famous passenger agents in the United States, George W. Martin, general western agent of the Rock Island, with offices in Denver. Mr. Martin is in the railroad business because he likes it, as he is the son-in-law of United States Judge Caldwell, who, as a Lincoln appointee and famous jurist, has had a number of good political appointments at his disposal.

Mr. Martin is a Tennessean and one of his exploits in his younger days is part of the history of that state. Mr. Martin's parents, before the war, were wealthy, but the great conflict left them impoverished. During the reconstruction days, when negroes were beginning to feel the first taste of power, a negro accused of murder was killed by the posse of whites pursuing him. The negroes, who were in a great majority, held a mass meeting and threatened to kill every white in the rural community. Mr. Martin was absolutely hopeless from the legally constituted protectors, because they were too far away to be summoned. A number of whites abandoned their possessions and fled for their lives.

A faithful negro brought word to the Martin home, and slipping a couple of revolvers into his pocket, Martin went to the little meeting house in a jungle, where a perfervid preacher was inciting his race to avenge the death of the murderer. Martin rode up as fast as his horse could carry him and was inside the meeting house before many of the negroes had seen him.

Stops Meeting.

Without making any use of his weapons Martin stood in the doorway and, pointing his finger at the preacher, said:

"This meeting has gone far enough. Every one in this meeting house must go home. If there is a single person here in ten minutes I shall kill him."

"Oh, Marse Gawge, I never did it," cried the negro, who was in a panic, he hurried past the one white man who by sole courage and the Anglo-Saxon will to command, cowed over a hundred desperate negroes. Martin spent the balance of the day riding about to the cabins seeing that the negroes remained at home. The governor and other state officials thanked him, and his neighbors said he had prevented a massacre.

"If I had been anybody but Marse Gawge we never would have given up like we did," said a negro braggart some years afterward. Some one asked why he particularly feared Martin, and the negro replied:

"I jest know you nebber seed him shoot. He shoots with bofe hands at onest jist like a couple of cannon."

Mr. Martin is six feet two, and his friends who make his determination quite understand how he overawed the negroes.

HALTS SERVICE COMPANY CASE

Court Postpones Hearing Until It Is Learned If Franchises Can Be Extended.

Court investigations into the standing of the defunct Salt Lake Public Service company were stopped for a time yesterday when Judge C. W. Morse of the district court ruled that the matter is being heard, ordered W. B. Albertson, receiver for the company, to ascertain whether extensions can be obtained for the franchises and water rights of the company and to report back to the court. The case was postponed indefinitely, but will be called on again when this information is obtained.

Sensational charges were made in the suit of Foster Copeland against the company, as one of the creditors, when Dr. J. J. Snider and Harry L. Thomas filed a petition in which they charged that Albertson and J. J. Chambers, one of the promoters and president of the company, were working together to defraud the creditors. The charges were set aside, but Judge Morse refused the request.

It is believed that if franchises and water rights can be extended they will be of more value. The assets of the company are the water rights of the Salt Lake and the water rights of the Salt Lake in the last few days and in railroad circles it is generally conceded that many points of the Utah petition will be acted on favorably to the shippers.

In the meantime none of the men who were active on either side of the case are making definite predictions. The statement made by S. H. Babcock of the local traffic bureau at the close of the hearing, that the Utah case had been presented fully and in a satisfactory manner, has not been supplemented.

Other members of the bureau say, however, that there is every reason to believe that substantial reductions will be granted and that traffic men on the roads involved admit that they expect their next big task will be in making up the new tariffs. Whether this will be simply to grant Utah the terminal rates, or to grant practically the rate asked for, is a matter on which opinions differ.
